CASH FOR BEST ESSAY

The Mid-America Orchid Congress essay contest is now closed. Entrants were invited to write an essay on “My problem with orchids is...” -- and win up to $100.00! The winners will be announced at the Congress’ Sunday Business Meeting in Columbus, OH, November 9, 2014. First prize wins $100.00; second, $50; third, $25. All three prize-winning essays will appear in future issues of the Congress’s newsletter, The Mid-American. Our very own Eunice Bragg entered the contest – Good luck Eunice!!

Raffle Tickets

Members are reminded to bring any ticket stubs, proceeds ($) and any unsold tickets (unless you expect to sell them before the show) to Jackie Hay at the October 19th meeting. Under our raffle license, all tickets sold and unsold must be accounted for and reconciled BEFORE the draw at 4:30pm on Saturday, October 25th. The winner need not be present to win. You can also contact Jackie by e-mail: jackie.hay@hotmail.com

Collector's Item:

Weird and wonderful, Brassavola cucullata will add a conversation piece to any collection of orchids. Visitors often comment, "that's an orchid?". B. cucullata is the type species for the genus, yet unique with its fringed lip with its long, tapered tip. The species passed through several genera since it was first known as Helleborine floribus albis, cucullatis Plum. (1703) based on a drawing of a plant from Haiti. In 1813 this species was used by R. Brown to establish the genus Brassavola.

This orchid can be found in the West Indies, Mexico, Central America and Colombia, Trinidad, Guyana and Venezuela. As might be expected with such a widely distributed species, it can be adapted to a wide range of cultural environments and generally, is easy to grow. One would also expect such a widely distributed species to display considerable variation in flowers. Surprisingly B. cucullata produces relatively consistent flowers regardless of where the plants originate from. The biggest difference one sees from plant to plant is in the color of the flowers. Although generally concolor white, flowers can have more or less golden petals and sepals and I have seen some examples that have almost reddish flowers. I suspect that these colorful variations might be as much due to cultural factors as genetics because the same plant can produce white flowers one year, and golden ones the next. In any event, there is usually more color on the outside surfaces of the flowers than the insides and the color tends to darken as the flowers age.

Like other members of the genus, B. cucullata has terete leaves that are even more pencil-like than its popular cousin, Brassavola nodosa. Whereas the latter species produces mostly upright plants, the subject of this essay often displays a semi-erect or drooping nature. This drooping habit makes B. cucullata well suited for growing on a mount or in a basket. Not only do the plants droop, but so do the flowers. It is precisely these droopy flowers that draw you to, or repel you from this orchid. Either you like the total departure from the full & round standard, or you find it distasteful.

Rhynchovola David Sander (Brassavola cucullata x Rhyncholaelia digbyana)

Relatively little hybridizing has been done with B. cucullata. The best-known hybrid is Rhynchovola David Sander (Brassavola cucullata x Rhyncholaelia digbyana). The frilly lip of both parents combines to make a large exotic flower with grace and beauty. A few other successful hybrids are being registered as breeders begin to recognize the species' desirable, although dominant, characteristics. As with other members of the genus, B. cucullata has a sweet fragrance at night which is passed on to its hybrids.

Being a low-elevation species from the tropics, B. cucullata can be grown within an intermediate temperature range of 55° to 60° F at night and 70° to 85° F during the day. It will easily tolerate higher temperatures during the summer. Here in South Florida our summer daytime highs will be in the low 90's from July into October. Plants will also tolerate occasional low temperatures below 50° F as long as it is not for prolonged periods and plants are dry. If you choose to grow B. cucullata mounted you will probably need to water it three or more times per week depending on other cultural factors and seasonal growth patterns. Potted plants will need less water but you will need to contain the long terete leaves with a ring stake. If you apply a half-strength solution of balanced fertilizer every week or two, your orchids will grow and flower better.

Habeneria rhodocheila (Mary Welacky) – Best species

Cattleya Hsinying Max Walker (Eleanor Sfalcin) – Best Hybrid

Note: There were eleven plants brought in for the September plant table. We could have put on a display with these alone. Those pictured were voted as "Best" by the members and guests present. Those not shown include: Cynodes Wine Delight (Mary Welacky); Psychopsis Mehdenhall 'Hildo', Masdevallia hybrid, Phalaenopsis hybrid (Jackie Hay); Cattleya amethystoglossa hybrid (Foeke); Miltonia Jean Imouye 'Kalapana', Catasetum (Frilly Doris x lucius), Cattleya Exima 'Sea God' (Jeannie Gascoigne).

Maxillaria schunkeana 'Black Queen', grown by Jeannie Gascoigne, is said to be the "blackest" of all orchid species.
